BY LISA MARIE CONKLIN
January 3, 2019

Hit the gym more. Spend less time looking at your phone. Both worthy resolutions, but what about resolutions for your new home? You know: those nagging items you or the inspector found before you bought the house but you haven't fixed yet.

Here's 6 home improvement resolutions that should top your to-do list this year.

6. Show your Windows some Love

Frosty build-up on the inside of your windows and chilly drafts means it's time to repair or replace your windows. "As structures shift and settle over time—insulation, caulking, and other protective materials slowly lose their protective powers. Older homes may leak air conditioning in the summer and heat in the winter," says Larry Patterson, franchise owner of Glass Doctor, a Neighborly Company. According to the EPA that adds up to 25 to 30 percent of heat gain and heat loss. When your windows aren't energy efficient, money is literally going out the window.

10 Ways to Use Salt to Keep Your House Spotless

By Margaret Heidenry | Jan 29, 2019

It has natural antibacterial properties and can be

On the American frontier in the early 1800s, salt was four times as expensive as beef. Way back then—before a handy thing called a refrigerator came into existence—salt was essential for preserving food.

Now, salt is so plentiful that we strew it on the streets to melt ice and use it in our food without thinking twice. But did you know every pinch of salt can also be used to clean your house? It's naturally antibacterial and a strong abrasive that can be used to whip every inch of your home into sparkling perfection.

Grab your salt shaker, and try out one of these hacks on cleaning day.

9. Get glass shower doors gleaming

Polish up your glass shower door with salt and grapefruit, says Brad Roberson, president of Glass Doctor, a window repair company.

Just cut the grapefruit in half, dip one half in salt and scrub away. The abrasive salt and the acidity of the grapefruit eat away soap scum and mineral buildup, keeping your shower doors shining.

Bonus tip: Add some grapefruit juice to the shower doors after cleaning to keep them spotless longer.

Sliding/Stackable Glass Doors Erase the Boundary Between Inside and Outdoors

By Terri Williams February 22, 2019 in Architecture / Renovations

Nothing brings the outside indoors like glass doors. They create an instant portal to the great outdoors. And with sliding glass doors that are also stackable/foldable, you can maximize your indoor and outdoor spaces while increasing your entertainment options. Below are some of the ways these versatile glass doors are being used today.

Natural Light/Energy Efficiency

Sliding doors have extra large panes of glass and, according to Mark Liston, President of Glass Doctor, a Neighborly Company, when the doors are shut, they function like floor-to-ceiling windows that allow enormous amounts of natural light to enter. “This makes your home feel grander and more inviting,” Liston explains. However, he recommends getting UV-blocking glass to prevent sunlight from heating up the house or causing any upholstery to fade.

“Glass isn’t an effective insulator, but modern window technology allows sliding doors to grant you those stunning views without forcing your utility bills up,” Liston says. “Look for composite gaskets, double-pane glass and other features designed for energy efficiency.”

Installing impact-resistant windows is another effective, albeit costlier, option.

“The design makes your windows perform much like a windshield, cracking into spider web patterns when hit, but not completely shattering,” said Frank Klavon, president of glass repair and replacement services company Glass Doctor.

Striking images of utter destruction caused by the likes of Katrina, Irma and other catastrophic hurricanes may lead some to believe that not much can be done to protect property from such a powerful storm.

However, essential steps can be taken to minimize a hurricane's impact on your home.

What's the Best Bathtub or Shower for Your Bathroom Remodel? How to Pick

Juanmonino/ISTock

One of the most exciting phases of a bathroom remodel is picking out the perfect bathtub or shower. Choosing the right wet features for a bathroom warrants a hard look at all your options. After all, this is how you can turn a necessary room into a spalike retreat.

But you probably already know that you have a lot of options to consider—and that it risks getting just a tad overwhelming in addition to figuring out your budget. That's why, in this latest installment of our "Dream Bathroom Remodeling Guide," we take you through the best ways to choose a bath, shower, and other wet features for your new bathroom.

Types of walk-in showers

Doorless shower: One of the most popular walk-in shower designs over recent years is the open shower design. "This design option provides easy maintenance—no need to clean glass—and accessibility. "Because the bathroom has to be accommodated to effectively contain water, most doorless showers are custom-made and installed," says Brad Roberson, president of Glass Doctor, a Neighborly company.

Glass Doctor Shower Door Options

Before choosing a product line, a specific door or any additional shower accessories, it's time to select the shower door or bathtub enclosure style that suits your needs and your individual design aesthetic. Shower doors and tub enclosures come in three main types: frameless, semi-frameless and framed. Within these categories, there are two main sub-categories: sliding door enclosures and swinging door enclosures.

Shower Door Frame Options

Frameless Enclosures

Frameless shower doors are great if you want a sleek, modern look, and they can help to make a small bathroom feel larger. Typically constructed of between 3/8-inch and 1/2-inch tempered glass, a frameless shower or bathtub enclosure is defined by the lack of a rigid metal frame surrounding the glass. Frameless shower enclosures may use headers, U-channels and clips to keep the frame safe and in place.

Semi-Frameless Enclosures

A semi-frameless shower door has more metal around the edge of the glass panes than a frameless enclosure, but there will be no metal on the interior of the shower door or lining the top of the bathtub or shower enclosure. Semi-frameless shower or bathtub enclosures are a fantastic choice for homeowners seeking a modern or clean aesthetic, but who prefer the extra security of a frame. Semi-frameless shower and bathtub enclosures are typically constructed with 1/2-inch thick tempered glass.

Framed Enclosures

Framed enclosures are typically the least expensive enclosure option for homeowners. They will have a metal frame around the entirety of the enclosure and are usually constructed with much thinner glass than their semi-frameless and frameless counterparts – typically just 3/16-inch laminated or tempered glass.

Sliding vs. Swinging Shower Door Enclosures

Sliding Door Enclosures

Sliding glass shower or bathtub doors, sometimes referred to as bypass shower doors, are shower doors installed using a track system. These doors require some type of track along the top and bottom of the door so that the door can slide using a series of wheels or rollers. Sliding door enclosures are available for frameless, semi-frameless and framed enclosures.

Swinging Door Enclosures

Swinging door enclosures open by swinging on a fixed point. Swinging shower doors are available in two types: hinged doors that open in one direction, and pivot doors that can open in either direction. Hinged and pivot shower doors are attached to a stationary glass panel, bathroom wall, bathroom floor, bathroom ceiling or shower surround.
